DICTATES SOCIAL FORMS

Then there are two great annual races which the president of the republic must attend whether he be a lover of the turf or not. These are the Grand Prix de Paris which closes the season and comes off in June and the Grand Prix du Consell Municipal, which takes place in Cotober. The president arrives at Long-champ at ten minutes after three, just before the big race commences. He drives from the Elysee with great pomp and ceremony, accompanied by his wife, some ministers, the chief members of the official household and a squad of municipal guards. M. Mollard arranges the ceremonial part of this gala procession the world, as officer of the Legion of Honor, minister plenipotentiary, introducer of embassadors and chief of the protocol.

One would imagine that the bearer of all these high-sounding titles should belong to the very oldest nobility, to whom the "correct thing" is innate and so Smettimes porters of the ministers leaves.

Dictates President's Dress.

Of late years, too, the president travels a great deal. He must be dressed suitably for each occasion. For instance, he must not wear the grand cordon of the Legion of Honor when receiving the respectful salutations of a rural mayor. He must make the proper bows and the becoming acknowledgments when the perfumery makers of Grasse present him with a barrel of attar of rosso on the occasion of a presidential visit. M. Mollard is at hand invariably to see that all goes decorously. He accompanies the president on all such junketing tours.

The distribution of decorations is not the least noteworthy function during these trips. So liberally are they distributed that the work is almost as onerous as that of the oldtime handshaking Dictates President's Dress.

IRISH ISLE IN STATE OF STRONG REBELLION

Special Cable to The Tribune.

DUBLIN, Aug. 19 -- Innishmurry, a little Island off the coast of Donegal, has suddenly become famous on account of the inhabitants' refusal to pay rates. In his report to the local government board the rate collector stated that he could not get a boat on the mainland to take him to the island on such an errand as collecting rates, and at the last meeting of the Sligo county council it was stated that some years ago two officials of the council who tried to land on the island for the same purpose were stoned off the shore by the inhabitants.

The question as to how a landing could be effected was discussed by the council at its last meeting and one member stated that a Dreadnought would be required for the purpose. The island is one and a half miles long and a half-munication with it. Fourteen families reside on the island and they live chiefly on barley, potatoes and fish.

For days a black flag, bearing the inscription, "Remember '98," flew conspicuously from the railway bridge at Portarlington. No steps were taken to remove it by the police or railway aumile broad and there is no direct comthorities for a week. his report to the local government board
